But Subic waste 'beyond permissible limits'

MAYUGA: "Domestic wastes" dumped into Subic Bay "clean."

By Nina Calleja in Manila, Tonette Orejas and Robert Gonzaga
Inquirer Central Luzon

THE HEAD of the Philippine office of a US Navy contractor yesterday disputed claims by government agencies that it dumped into Subic Bay toxic wastes from American ships that recently took part in joint military exercises in the country.

Five days after the Inquirer reported the environment issue, retired Vice Adm. Mateo Mayuga, CEO of Glenn Defense Marine Philippines Inc., called reports about the company dumping hazardous wastes into the bay "inaccurate or false."

Mayuga said the local office of a Singapore-based multinational company operating in 27 countries handled domestic wastes from the toilets and kitchens of US Navy ships, but, according to him, those were safe for disposal.

3 senators seek probe of toxic waste dumping

By Cathy C. Yamsuan and TJ Burgonio

THREE senators yesterday filed separate resolutions calling for an investigation of the supposed dumping of toxic waste from a US Navy ship off the coast of Zambales province by a vessel owned by a Singapore-based multinational firm that allegedly did not have the required registration and permits to do so.

BSP backs clamor for review of gold tax

By Michelle V. Remo and Gil Cabacungan

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) has joined the clamor for a review of the 7-percent tax on gold sales, believing that the smuggling of the precious metal out of the country could become even more rampant if the tax issue remained unresolved.

Asked to comment on criticisms of the taxes on gold sales, BSP Deputy Governor Diwa Guinigundo said there was indeed merit to the proposal for the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) to soften its stance on the gold tax.

Palace dismayed by SC 'no live coverage' ruling

By TJ Burgonio and Christine O. Avendaño

MALACAÑANG yesterday expressed disappointment over the Supreme Court ban on the live coverage of the Maguindanao massacre trial and hoped the high court would "revisit" this decision.

"Remember that the President asked for a live trial and certainly we would like the Maguindanao massacre trial to be covered live. The decision in the Supreme Court, that's a little restrictive," presidential spokesperson Edwin Lacierda said in a briefing.

People's action up vs political dynasties

By Philip C. Tubeza and Jerome Aning

TWO POLITICAL parties yesterday called for the holding of a people's initiative to end political dynasties in the country, with one party warning it would go to the Supreme Court if the authorities dragged their feet.

Ang Kapatiran and Social Justice Society (SJS) parties said a people's initiative for the adoption of a law prohibiting political dynasties should start now.

PH 'budget English teacher' of the world

THE WORLD'S "budget English teacher."

This was how a recent BBC News report described the Philippines in highlighting the relatively cheap access to education in the country compared to other English-speaking nations.

The report, written by Kate McGeown and posted online yesterday, noted the surge in the number of foreign students attracted by the country's competitive rates for English education, which cost only a fraction of the tuition in schools in the United States or Canada.

Aside from language students, the number of foreign graduate and postgraduate students in the country are reportedly on the rise, apparently recognizing that local universities are on par with global standards.

A check with the Bureau of Immigration Student Desk indicated that as of October 2012, a total of [illegible] foreigners had applied for study permits, which was more than thrice the applications in 2008, totaling 7,349.

The agency also expects the applications for full student visas to reach at least 25,000 by the end of the year, which is over four times the 2008 figure of [illegible] applications.

A major advantage for Filipinos is having a clear American accent, the report said, "partly because the Philippines was a US colony for five decades and partly because so many people here have spent time working in call centers that cater to a US market."

But studying in the Philippines presents some challenges to students, the report pointed out. "Living here means coping with the bureaucracy and corruption, and if you're in Manila, the heavy pollution," it said.

Moreover, foreigners may find it difficult to understand Taglish, a mix of Tagalog and English, which Filipinos use in informal communication.

"But for an increasing number of people, these are small obstacles compared with the benefits of studying in the Philippines," the report added.

This is not the first time the country was recognized for its English proficiency.

On April, the Philippines topped 75 other countries in the Business English Index 2012 prepared by the GlobalEnglish Corp., a California-based company that aims to advance business English among global organizations.

Only the Philippines attained a score above 7.0, a "level within range of a high proficiency that indicates an ability to take an active role in business discussions and perform relatively complex tasks," GlobalEnglish said in its release.

The Philippines is joined in the top five by Norway (6.94), Britain (6.69), India (6.56) and Slovenia (6.19).

Noting that a country's business English capability was an indicator of its economic growth and business success, GlobalEnglish said that "it is not surprising that both the Philippines and Norway—the only two countries in the top five in both 2011 and 2012—are improving their economies, based on the latest GDP data from the World Bank."

MESSAGES

My warmest greetings to the Department of Agriculture on the occasion of your 2012 Gawad Saka, the Search for Outstanding Achievers in Agriculture and Fisheries.

Agriculture is a vital foundation of our nation's economy, and we in government, together with our partner industries, are steadfast in strengthening this sector to fulfill our goal of national progress and stability. May this event further inspire our farmers, fishers, agricultural scientists, and entrepreneurs to observe the comprehensive management of our land and water resources, in pursuit of food security, increased local incomes, and an empowered citizenry. Let us keep cultivating a culture of excellence, innovation, and productivity, as we sustain the momentum of our country's social and economic advancement.

My heartfelt congratulations to the 2012 Gawad Saka awardees for facing up to the challenges of our present milieu and responding to our people's needs. The progress of our agriculture depends on your ingenuity and productivity. Continue to be role models and movers of society with passion and dedication to your civic duty to revitalize the Philippines.
